He is a member of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the American Society for Industrial Security, as well as numerous other professional organizations. Mr. Buckley has lectured extensively to law enforcement, government and business groups.

This one-day training program on The Reid Technique of Interviewing and Interrogation consists of three primary topics:

1. Behavior Symptom Analysis
2. The Behavior Analysis Interview
3. The Reid Nine Steps of Interrogation

Behavior Symptom Analysis

During this you will learn the verbal and nonverbal behavior symptoms that are displayed by a person who is telling the truth during a non-accusatory interview, as well as those displayed by a person who is withholding or fabricating relevant information. The specific behaviors discussed include attitude; posture; significant posture changes; grooming, personal and protective gestures; eye contact; and, verbal responses. The ability to recognize and evaluate these behaviors becomes particularly important in those cases in which the available investigative information does not definitively establish the credibility of the subject. At the conclusion of this segment of the program, you will have a behavioral model for both the truthful and deceptive individual that can be used for the evaluation of students and staff in future investigative interviews.

The Behavior Analysis Interview

Most investigative interviews consist of two types of questions – investigative and behavior provoking. Investigative questions concern the subject's version of events, alibi or activities at the time in question, developed by the traditional who, what, where, when, why and how type of questions. Behavior provoking questions are ones that are used to assess the subject's truthfulness by evaluating the nature of their response. Truthful people answer the behavior provoking questions one way, while a deceptive person usually offers a different verbal response. During this segment you will learn how to phrase and ask the behavior provoking questions, and describe the type of answers to anticipate from the truthful and deceptive individuals.

The Reid Nine Steps of Interrogation

In this segment of the training program you will learn the interrogation process, beginning with how to initiate the confrontation; develop the interrogational theme; stop denials; overcome objections; and, use the alternative question to stimulate the admission.

During each of these segments we will show videotapes of actual interviews and interrogations to illustrate the material.
